Brief History

Michael D. Sublett, born 1943 in Kansas City, Missouri, received his Bachelor's Degree from the University of Missouri in 1966. He went on to get his Master's Degree in 1967 at the University of Missouri and his Ph.D. from the University of Chicago in 1974, with all three degrees in Geography. He has served in both the Army National Guard and U.S. Army Reserve for a total of twenty-five years of active status, and served as the Chairperson of the Geography-Geology Department at Illinois State University from 1978 to 1988. Dr. Sublett taught at Illinois State from 1970 to 2015, receiving numerous awards related to his service as a geography professor.

Scope

The collection includes undergraduate essays written by Dr. Sublett's students pertaining to locations in McLean County (with one concerning DeWitt County), mainly in Bloomington-Normal. Most essays include photographs, maps, diagrams, and interviews with local residents.

OLD NORTH NORMAL ESSAYS

In 2003, Dr. Sublett began the Old North Normal Project in the Field Geography course and liked the 2003 results so much that he continued using it every fall thereafter, through 2014. From the outset, this research and writing endeavor served as the first class activity of the semester, and took the students many weeks to complete. The Old North Normal Historic District officially became part of Normal over the summer of 2003. Given its proximity to campus, the availability of excellent map resources, and an opportunity for Field Geography students to get going on the research phase during the first few weeks of the semester, he contacted the chair of the citizens committee that had proposed the district to the Town of Normal. Finding committee interest and the promise of assistance, he launched the project. Students each chose one of the 140 or so residential structures in the district, interviewed a current adult resident of that structure, looked back through city directories to find out who had lived there previously, performed a thorough parcel search regarding ownership, and used other interviews and various additional sources to piece together the sequence of ownership and occupancy at that address. A key factor in essay quality control was the requirement that a preliminary version of each student's carefully edited (by Dr. Sublett and student) essay would go to the interviewed resident for review prior to completion of the project. Some residents did ask for revisions, and student writers complied.

A total of 80 essays constitute the collection. Most residences have addresses on north-south Normal Avenue or north-south School Street, with a few on the cross streets, Clay Street or Gregory Street. An alley, a rare Normal occurrence, extends between Normal Avenue and School Street, from Gregory all the way to Clay, and provided students looking at lots backing up the alley with an additional observational and photographic angle. Dr. Sublett's intention was for students to examine a lot and dwelling place that no previous student had studied. By accident, however, one lot and house, 615 School Street, ended up being the subject of study in both 2006 and 2009.

Dr. Sublett asked students to submit three identical copies of the final draft of the Old North Normal essays. One would become part of the Museum collection. A second went to the archivist for the Old North Normal Committee. And the final copy, corrections made (if any), went to the resident that the student had initially interviewed. Find here the assignment for each year and the cover letters that accompanied the committee's copies of the essays.

SUBDIVISION ESSAYS

Dr. Sublett taught Illinois State University's Field Geography course (initially Techniques of Field Work), always in the fall semester, from 1979 until 2014, except for 1987 and 2000 when he was on sabbatical leave. During the years he taught Field Geography, excluding 1985 when students did a different project, he required each student to examine a residential subdivision in McLean County, and interview several subdivision inhabitants seeking to learn their perception of the quality of life therein. In addition to text, these course-culminating essays included student-produced original maps, photographs, and other illustrations. Scattered through the collection, particularly in the latter years, are project assignment handouts to the students. The course syllabus for 2013 is also present.

The collection numbers 305 essays. Of these, 140 are about areas then within the limits of Bloomington, 79 are from Normal, 6 are from subdivisions that involved both municipalities, and 80 are from rural McLean County. A few of the students studied neighborhoods (like South Hill, in Bloomington) or historic residential districts (like Cedar Crest, in Normal). Students sometimes chose an area that a previous student had studied, but Dr. Sublett generally required a time lapse of several years between such examinations. Oakwoods, a subdivision in the southwest portion of Bloomington, counted the most studies: six.

Initially, Dr. Sublett saved the subdivision essays in order to deny students in subsequent Field Geography classes access to previous studies. In those early years, 1979-1984 and 1986, he made corrections and suggestions on the essays. At the end of the text segment of the essays in many of those years he told the student his or her score. Those scores and overall summaries are now gone, in order to ensure study privacy. Beginning with the essays for 1987, he provided feedback to students via other means.

SENIOR FIELD PROBLEM ESSAYS

The Senior Field Problem began at Illinois State in 2003 when faculty members in the Department of Geography-Geology were looking for a way to assess student learning outcomes on the part of the Geography majors. As the instructor of the required capstone course for all Geography majors, Dr. Sublett offered to create a field-based, interview-intensive problem that would culminate in an illustrated and documented essay focused on some geographical concept, in a particular local setting. Faculty would then review the results using an elaborate rubric that they had helped Dr. Sublett create. Although the faculty review process eventually ended and the geographers adopted additional assessment tools, Dr. Sublett used the Senior Field Problem as a culminating activity in the Seminar in Geography course every spring through 2015.

All told there are 301 essays in the collection that resulted from the Senior Field Problem assignment. They break down into four distinct phases. First, in 2003 (17 essays), the focus was on the concept of site and situation; the setting was street intersections in Bloomington-Normal. Site refers to the immediate environs of the study location, in this case things like an intersection's slope and drainage or the character of human modifications (pavement type, number of lanes, sidewalks, adjacent land uses). On the situation side, students were to look for the connections between the intersection and the rest of the Twin Cities, and beyond. Second, from 2004 through 2007 (85 essays), Dr. Sublett assigned each student a rectangular (most cases) block in Bloomington-Normal and asked the student to research the sequent occupance of that portion of the urban settlement system, taking into account significant changes in land use, be it agricultural, industrial, commercial, institutional, residential, etc. Students were to map the land use in particular years and discuss the changes that led to that stage of development. Third, students worked in rural McLean County during the years 2008 to 2012 (135 essays), each seeking to discover the sense of place for a section of land, roughly one square mile. For the first four years of the rural assignment, the sections lay along or very near the route of a excursion that Dr. Sublett, William D. Walters, Jr., and Southard M. Modry published in 1973, entitled Commentary on a Corn Belt Countryside: A Self-Guided Rural Experience. That route ran west from Normal to beyond Danvers, northeast to lakes Evergreen and Bloomington, eastward to Lexington, southwest to Towanda, and eventually to the east side of Normal. Having used most sections along the self-guided route, Dr. Sublett sent the 2012 students out toward Stanford, McLean, Heyworth, and Downs. Fourth, the last three years of the Senior Field Problem, 2013-2015 (64 essays), Dr. Sublett brought the Seminar students back into Bloomington-Normal, maintained the sense of place as the concept focus, and assigned students each a short segment of the Constitution Trail.

Mixed with the essays are the assignments for each class. In terms of length, the 2003 assignment was seven pages and about 3300 words, while the 2015 version ran 12 pages and 5300 words. Find also the course syllabi for 2013, 2014, and 2015. Syllabi help provide an academic context for the Senior Field Problem.

TRANSIT BUS ESSAYS

From the fall of 2005 until the fall of 2014, Dr. Sublett taught all sections of the Doing Geography (formerly Geographic Techniques) course in the Department of Geography-Geology. During that period, the course was a requirement for Geography majors and an elective (early on a requirement) for students minoring in Geography. As the title implies, the emphasis was on teaching students to do things as professional geographers would do them, things like being able to collect data in the field via observation and via structured and unstructured interviews. Prior to the fall semester in 2005, Dr. Sublett worked out an arrangement with the local public transit system to have students ride the buses on specified fixed bus routes, observe what transpired on the buses, observe the areas through which the routes passed, and interview individuals that might have had insights into the route and its role in the urban fabric. Working with a colleague at the transit system each time, Dr. Sublett prepared a set of questions for students to use in the structured interviews. Through time the focus of these interviews shifted from bus drivers (fall 2005) to local public officials (spring 2006) to employers/managers of places along the routes (fall 2006, spring 2007, fall 2007) to citizens living near fixed routes (fall 2008 and fall 2009) to bus riders (fall 2010, fall 2011, fall 2012, fall 2013, fall 2014). In addition to the featured interview subjects of the semester, students were free to speak with other members of the public who might shed light on the particular route or routes that the student investigated.

Essays in this collection total 331. In eight of the semesters, and for 221 of the resulting essays, students received an assignment sheet that involved one fixed route. For the other four semesters, transit officials wanted a comparison between two fixed routes, resulting in the other 110 essays. Routes that came into existence during this decade, the Teal J and Aqua K, or routes that had significant alterations, like the Blue E, attracted special attention from the transit system and produced relatively more essays than for other routes that did not change. All essays required a map that the student prepared, and most maps involved the use of technical pens and colored pencils, given that these students typically had yet to acquire computer mapping skills. Photographs and graphs were also an essay component.

Students turned in two copies of the final draft of this essay plus a computer file summarizing the results of their structured interviews. Dr. Sublett sent all these computer files to the transit system and later delivered one copy of each essay to his transit colleague. The second copy of the essay he retained for the Museum. In addition to the actual essays, find here the assignment for each semester, the course syllabus for a couple of semesters, and the minutes of the first meeting he had in 2005 with transit officials regarding the proposed project.

The transit system went by the name Bloomington-Normal Public Transit System until 2012. In that year the board changed the name to Connect Transit.

OTHER ESSAYS

These 19 essays fall into three chronological categories: 1983, 1985, and 1992-2015. The 1983 essay, by Lawrence Kober, was a product of the Climate course that Dr. Sublett taught in the spring of that year. Each student had to complete a research project and write an essay to report the findings. Mr. Kober's essay, dealing with the placement of the official weather instruments in the Twin Cities, was the only one that had a local flavor. In the fall of 1985, the Field Geography students spent much of the semester looking into faculty commuting to teach classes in buildings other than the one in which they had their office. Students in the Field course each looked at several departments and wrote an essay about the commuting patterns that they found. Dr. Sublett used their findings and other evidence to write Have Chalk, Will Travel: On-Campus Commuting by Teachers at Illinois State University, Fall Semester 1985, which the Department of Geography-Geology published in 1986. As for the remaining seven essays, all are the result of independent study work with Dr. Sublett, mostly by Geography majors and all but one on McLean County topics. The exception, the study by Jodi Becker, deals with land use in Clinton, in adjacent DeWitt County. Essays from 1983 and 1985 include comments by Dr. Sublett.
