Historical Sketch

The history of the 33rd Illinois Infantry Regiment began with the formation of the “Normal Rifles” after the outbreak of war in April of 1861. The Normal Rifles consisted of Illinois State Normal University (ISNU) students who practiced drills under a hired drillmaster. Shortly after the First Battle of Bull Run (July 21, 1861), ISNU President Charles E. Hovey received permission to organize a regiment with the Normal Rifles serving as the nucleus for Company A. Companies C and G were also raised in McLean County. Seven other companies were recruited from residents of various counties, including Bureau, Pike, Christian, Knox, Stark, LaSalle, and others.

In September 1861, the Thirty-Third was mustered into service by Captain T. G. Pitcher at Camp Butler, Springfield. From there, the Regiment moved to Ironton, Missouri where it remained for the winter. Early duty included a tedious schedule of marches and guard postings. While guarding Pilot Knob and Ironton Mountain Railroad, Company A engaged in a skirmish, an early success (albeit minor) for the discouraged North.

On July 7, 1862, another skirmish occurred at Cotton Plant, Arkansas. More than 120 Confederates were killed. Seven were killed and fifty-seven wounded on the Union side; no one was killed from the Thirty-third. Col. Hovey, wounded in the fight, earned promotion to Brigadier-General.

During the summer of 1862, the regiment suffered ill health due to the climate of the marshy districts of eastern Arkansas and western Mississippi. In October, the regiment was ordered north to St. Louis to recover its strength. By March 1863, the regiment received orders to join the epic campaign that ended in the capture of Vicksburg, Mississippi.

The Regiment was attached to 1st Brigade, 1st Division, of the 13th Army Corps. The Vicksburg campaign marked the most significant months of the Thirty-Third’s war record. First, came the capture of Port Gibson, in which four companies of the Thirty-Third were deployed as skirmishers. On May 16-17, the Regiment participated in the Battle of Champion’s Hill and Black River Bridge. Champion’s Hill featured the loss from friendly fire of two members Company C. At Black River Bridge, the Thirty-Third played a role in the capture of fourteen pieces of artillery, along with hundreds of prisoners.

On May 19, Captain Kellogg of Company C was killed by enemy fire. He was replaced by Edward J. Lewis. On May 22, the Regiment participated in a grand assault of the Vicksburg defensive works. The assault was repulsed with significant losses. Of those who charged from the Thirty-Third, one-third were hit, with twelve killed on the field and several others mortally wounded. A successful six-week siege followed the failed assault. The surrender occurred on July 4. During the campaign, the Thirty-Third lost twenty men with more than one hundred wounded. After action around Jackson, Mississippi, the Regiment spent considerable time on railroad guard duty in Louisiana.

In November of 1863, the Regiment partook in the capture of Fort Esperanza, Texas. By January 1, 1864, the regiment reenlisted as veterans for a $400 bounty and went on furlough. Much of 1864 was also spent on railroad guard duty.

On March 2, 1865, a train derailment near Boutte Station, Louisiana, claimed the lives of nine men, with another seventy-two injured. Companies C and F were the only two to escape with no casualties. Beginning on March 27, the regiment participated in the assault of Spanish Fort, the main defense of Mobile, Alabama. They engaged the defensive works until the April 8 surrender. On November 24, the Regiment was mustered out of service and by December 7, all the men had received their pay and the Thirty-Third ceased to exist.

The Thirty-Third participated in the following actions: Fredericktown, MO; Cotton Plant, AR; Port Gibson, Black River Ridge, Champion's Hill, Vicksburg, Jackson, MS; Fort Esperanza, TX; and Spanish Fort, AL.

Scope and Contents Note

This collection contains clerical records including: muster in and out rolls; inventory of supplies and clothes; casualty reports; orders received and given; transportation records; and pay records. In addition, there are special order and special request documents to superiors by Captain Lewis and other officers illustrating Company conditions and actions during the conflict.

Most of the documents in the collection fall between the dates of July 1861, when the Regiment first came into existence, and November 1865, when the Company was mustered out. A smaller number of documents, pertaining to veteran reunions and related activities, go beyond this date.

Other interesting items from the collection include documents concerning the 1864 presidential election and the issue of freed slaves.
